

It is one of the most popular songs of the Hindi film industry. It is sung by Amitabh Bachchan in 1973 film 'Sadhna' and became so famous that it started to play even in non-Indian films. The song, written by Jaidev, was composed by Ravindra Jain. The song describes a train journey interrupted when a man's son gets lost at an age where everything is new to him and his father patiently waits for him to return. The story starts just after the father has left home for work without saying goodbye or giving instructions on what to do if something happens while he is away. The child, who is left alone, leaves home and does something that makes him unhappy and by the time he realizes his mistake and returns home, his father is already gone and he cannot find him. The train then stops at a random station where the child gets off and proceeds to search for his father. He looks around and sees people who look like his dad but as they turn around, they disappear. He struggles to see as much as possible as passersby look at him as though he were a ghost. The feeling of separation from his father is now unbearable for the child who now decides to return home. Before he does so, he notices an old man reading a paper that shows a man that resembles his father's photo. He shows the man the paper and asks if he has seen his father. The old man then smiles and replies that his son will soon come home. The child then goes home with that hope in his heart. The song is also famous for its rendition by Asha Bhosle, who sings it in semi-classical style.
